Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Publications of the University of Pennsylvania, Vol. 2: University Bulletin On behalf of the Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania, I gratefully accept the completed Agnew Memorial Pavilion of its Hospital. In this act the University acquires two things; one, a valuable addition to its material possessions and facilities for its work, the other, an added measure of responsibility; and it is my wish to say a few words on both of these subjects. The material acquisition is a large extension to the formerly existing hospital building, and a distinct step towards the completion of the original plan, which contemplated a full use of the plot of ground given to us by the city for hospital purposes. Since the first section of our buildings was erected, there have been numerous improvements in methods and materials of construction, a clearer conception of the best plans for hospital uses, and somewhat of a change in architectural sentiment; and these are all exemplified in the building in which we are now gathered. No expense has been spared in the effort to secure the best possible construction and equipment for the care and cure of patients, for the teaching of students, and for the comfort of attendants; and I confidently look for the approval by the experts who are gathered here to-day of our plans and their execution. It is a valuable acquisition in several senses. It has cost a great deal of money, and I have no doubt fully represents the expenditure. It largely increases our facilities for the relief of the sick and suffering, for the clinical instruction of our medical students, and for our never-ending study...
